JEFF PROUTY, a wounded war veteran, is identified at a Juarez gambling hall as a native of Chinook, Colo., by "Gentleman Harry" King, a gambler. King tells him that he is wanted at home for a train robbery, which Jeff denies, as his memory faculty has been impaired by shell-shock. The gambler also tells him that his father has died, leaving a large ranch to Jeff's foster-sister, and for half-interest will help him obtain the inheritance.

A tramp, sitting at an adjoining table, overhears the conversation. He follows the two to Chinook. Here Jeff has many adventures and aids the girl-owner of the ranch in driving off rustlers. In a battle between the foreman and Jeff, the tramp is mortally wounded. Jeff rides up with the girl and the tramp confesses that he is really Jeff Prouty, telling him that the two had fought together, and while both were wounded, he had exchanged identification tags, leaving the hero free to marry the girl.
